Amie Williams moved to Greece last year concerned about the ongoing refugee/migrant crisis and its effect on women and girls. She has been working with a group of young women to build a Media/Tech start-up center in Athens, which will directly target survivor's of trafficking and gender-based violence, training them in digital media and IT skills in order to help them launch businesses and find jobs. The overall goal of the project is to empower female voices in media, but also to use multimedia and technology as a bridge of understanding and path to success, raising awareness about migrant women's rights and their capacity to contribute to the economy and drive change.

Hepatx Corporation is developing cell therapies as a possible alternative to liver transplant as a treatment for liver failure. These products will represent an entirely new class of therapeutic product based on the principles of regenerative medicine. Rather than simply halting a disease process and allowing the body to heal itself, these products will be used to actively repair damaged tissues and organs, which will allow us to access previously untreatable patients and will enable novel therapeutic modes.

Many suffer the effects of dementia. Since Alzheimer's often leaves one unable to communicate, it's easy to assume that a human is somehow unaware. However, LaVar Steel, a retired art professor, provided a first-hand account of Alzheimer's disease through his artistic ability. It silenced his tongue, but did not quiet his hands. His drawings began during the last 18 months of his life and continued until the day before he died. The book SEE WITH YOUR EYES - HEAR WITH YOUR HEART contains beautiful, abstract drawings as well as excerpts from LaVar's lecture notes and artist's statements. It's a fascinating look at dementia from a unique perspective.

Items related to the book are available on lavarsteelart.com. This year a companion book on caregiving tips will be published. It is co-authored by Marian Steel, Ph.D, and Jared Helms, D.O. It contains the untold story of LaVar's book of drawings.

Sandra Clark Jergensen's a total geek about all things food. As a cooking teacher, recipe developer and kitchen expert, she home cooks how to become naturals in their own kitchens through seasonal cooking, efficiency coaching, and classes in Davis, CA area and online at thekitchennatural.com. The Kitchen Natural empowers cooks to live more simply, starting in the kitchen.

Her writing and work (most often about food) has been featured in academic journals to design blogs: Gastronomica, Design Mom, Apartment Therapy and The Huffington Post.

As a foster parent and volunteer instructor at Davis Community Meals, Sandra is passionate about engaging in the place where she lives. She lives with one husband and two children; with equal addictions to both toast and yoga, and struggles to take pictures with her eyes open.

Sandra shares an easy and vegan-flexible recipe for Green Fried Rice with us.

Her weekly emails are full of kitchen spunk and simple, doable ideas. Grab a slice of the inspiration here:
